"OLD FRITZ" ON TAP .- Considerable sersation has been produced among Prussian artofficials by the discovery in an old fashioned ale house at Lille, of a magnificent portrait of Frederick the Great, mounted, a field marshal's baton in his right hand and holding inspection upon an infantry regiment drawn up in battle array at the edge of a wood. This picture, it would oppear, has been for the last seventy or eighty years the solitary ornament of the tap room at the "Cabarat du Roi de Prus-se," the oldest establishment of its kind in the prim and well to do city of Lille. Until very lately, so blackened was its surface by dirt and smoke that its surject and executive details were alike utterly undistinguishable. Over and over again the regular frequenters of the cabarat had urged its proprietor to have the old picture cleaned, as it might perhaps tura cu: to b) worth something; but the land-lerd of the R.i de Prusse seems to have been possessed by a sirt of odd superstition that the prosperity of his establishment was bound up with the grimy square of canvas suspended over his tap room hearth, and that if he meddled with this "amulet" his good luck would forsake him.

The other day, however, he yielded to the pressing solicitations of some of his wealthier and more influential costomers-gentlemen owning small collections of pictures and inter-ested in all matters connected with the artsand allowed the picture to be "treated" by an experienced cleaner, under whose expert hand it revealed itself as a masterpice. The town of Lille has off red to nurshase it for a large sum of money, but "mine host," who is well off, and perfectly aware that the portrait will draw crowds of new customers, native and foreign, to his establishment, his declared his resolved not to part with "O'd Fraz" for any pecuaiary consideration whatsoever. For this determination he will probably be rewarded by a handsome addition to his income, and by he unquestiled approbation of Mr. Phomas Usriyle. - Loudon Telegraph.

THE WAITERS AT FIRE ISLAND -There is a dining room which icoreases one's appeal e; the walls are so clean, being of unpainted yellow wood, that one mentally pronounces them fit to cat upon, and then the ocean breez:s steal in and give to everything a saline, pungent flavor. Moreover, the waiters are of the gentler sex, and uncommonly propossessing. They beam upon young men and take their orders with a confidential smile which is not a little embar rassing sometimes to the recipients. We sat opposite young Pousby, who is here with his mamma, a vigilant mater who presides with much urbanity and gray puff at the head of the table. Taking advantage of his parent's 300 packages of POTOMAC FISH for sale by absence from breaklast, the guileless Elward flirted openly with the waitress, much to the disgus: of Sylvia, who has taken no notice of him whatever sices, and said to me with asperity this afternoon, "It you let that puppy Pons-by speak to me I shall go home!" What ought one to do when one's self-willed relative says she will go home? New Pousby is not a puppy-he is only an ass, and he received a speedy punishment for his indiscretion. The ecquettish waitress, evidently believing that what is sauce for breakfast is sauce for dioner, beamed upon the hapless Elward, who turned very red, and murmured in his ear that there were no more clam tritters, but would fish do, whereupon the mother grew wroth, and, leaning towards her abashed offspring, who was alternately trying to keep his glass in his eye and swallow everything within reach, remark. ed, "Edward-my son-it is evident to mo that you have given that person some eccouragement. We will speak of this later; in the meantime, remember that your mother and that I congratulate you up in the great step you are taking. It was, indeed, sad to see you wasting your youth in a lift of disgus ing drunkeness. However, all is well that ends well, and it pleases me to think that you have said good by for ever to the wine shops. As to you, my poor Catherine, thank heaven heartily that you have been ab e, ugly as you are, to find a husband; never forget that you ought, by an ucchangeable sweetness and devotion without bounds, to try to obtain pardon for your physical imperfection, for, I repeat you are a real blunder of vature. Ard new, my dear ouildren, I join you to matrimony.

and Miss Sylvia are present." The wretched Elward kicked Hebe violently as she approached, and she went away with an injured look, doubtless consequent upon barked shins. It is certainly awkward for pretty waiter girls to flitt when one's mauma is on deck, but it is objectionable at any time.

AN UNLOOKED FOR ADDRESS -All who have seen a Freich wedding knew of the homely and frequently familiarly affectionate macper in which the officiating priest delivers a little hemily to the intending husband and wife. On a recent consion all were astounded at the plainness of speech of the following ad dress: "It is from the bottom of my heart, Joseph.

A DEAL of abuse is being piled on a New park. They were stroling along in a leverly way, when they suddenly stopped and commerced bugging and osculatory exercise. At this jucture a policeman stepped up, and, despite their vehement protestations, hauled them off to the lock up, where they were detained all night. Of course this was severe, very severe; but we cannot wonder that the guardian of peace and propriety mistook the ultra aff. ctionate pair for a very different sort of persons. The public park was no place for such indulgences. But, in order to prevent such annoying blunders in future, it might be well to have a small space in Central park set apart, a sort of zona libre, where married couples can embrace and osculate without risk of arrest,
